1. On 23 January 1952, Lieutenant General Otmar Kreacic, supreme political commissar of the Communist Party in the Yugoslav Army, turned in a pessimistic report to the Politburo on the current political situation in the Yugoslav Army.
2. In the opinion of Kreacic, thirty percent of the officers in combat units are pro-Cominform and, in case of war, they will attempt to go over to the Soviets with their troops. The General added a long list to the report, giving the names of officers who are to be transferred from command positions to administrative and supply functions.
3. Kreacic also recommended that a school for training propaganda officers be set up. The officers would be made to attend courses which explain the Soviet deviation from the orthodox Communist line as well as from Marxist doctrine.
